If you can confidently put together Spanish prepositions with nouns, youll be one step closer to thinking in Spanish. Prepositions is in phrases by combining them with other words such as verbs or nouns Then, when you can think in phrases, youll be able to quickly produce more natural-sounding Spanish. In this post, youll learn how to use Spanish prepositions with nouns to other nouns and nouns to verbs. An overview of prepositions and nouns Prepositions are a massive topic. So, rather than create a definite guide on prepositions, like our guides on Spanish adjectives, Spanish articles, or Spanish direct and indirect pronouns, I decided to break the topic down into separate articles each with a focus on a particular aspect of prepositions. Last week, I wrote about Spanish prepositions and verbs. In this article, were going to talk about prepositions and nouns. But, Im going to avoid prepositions of positions (e.g. above, below, besides etc.), and instead focus on prepositions of ownership and material, detail and how to connect nouns and verbs. This means we are going to take a closer look at sentences like these: English: I prefer action movies. Espaol: Prefiero las pelculas de accin. English: We have an opportunity to do something unique. Espaol: Tenemos la oportunidad para hacer algo nico. In terms of the order well review these prepositions of ownership and material: Algo de Something of / someones This first group of prepositions and nouns tends to be the easiest to understand. There are two options for this group. The first option: whenever you use an apostrophe in English for ownership (e.g. Anas car, Diegos pen etc.), in Spanish you will need to start with the prepositionde, and then finish with the person that owns the object. English: This is Pedros house. Espaol: Esta es la casa de Pedro. English: Marinas glasses are on the table. Espaol: Las gafas de Marina estn en la mesa. English: The banda fue grabada en el extranjero. Note, ironically, that as a reverse of English, when we want to say something of mine or something of ours with a possessive pronounin Spanish, youll need to avoid a preposition. English: She is a friend of ours. Espaol: Es una amiga nuestra. The second option: whenever there isnt a Spanish adjective to describe the category of something or what something is made from, then youll also need to follow the noun with the preposition de and then the material or category, English: She plays better on grass courts. Espaol: Hay dos diseos, una silla de metal. English: I love horror movies. Espaol: Me encantan las pelculas de terror. 2. Prepositions of detail: Algo sobre Something aboutLast week I wrote about prepositions and verbs and I recommended that you avoid using sobre because this Spanish preposition rarely works well with nouns, sobre is one of your best options. Specifically, this works really well when you want to follow a noun with another noun to talk about the details and specifics of a given topic. For example: English: I have a question about prepositions. Espaol: Tiene alguna information about the wine cellars in the region? Espaol: Todo sobre mi madre. This last example sample sample sample sample sample sample sample sample sample. comes from the title of a popular Spanish movie which may help you remember this construction if youve seen the movie (or plan to).3. How to connect nouns and infinitive verbs: Algo de, algo para Something toBased on working with the students in our Spanish movie which may help you remember this construction if youve seen the movie (or plan to).3. How to connect nouns and infinitive verbs: Algo de, algo para Something toBased on working with the students in our Spanish movie which may help you remember this construction if youve seen the movie (or plan to).3. because the phrases of this group dont line up well with English. And, when students ask us why these sentences are the way they are, we can only say that this is just how Spanish treats this combination of prepositions and nouns. To see this group in action, lets take this simple question in English: Is there anything to eat? When you translate this sentence into Spanish, it is tempting to put algo (something) and the infinitive verb comer (to eat) directly next to each other. But, in Spanish, you need something in between a noun and an infinitive verb comer? Hay algo para comer? Hay a would say they are generally interchangeable. Algo de comer is probably the most common in this group but the others are still common. And, if we swapped algo and comer for a different verb and noun then this order of frequency use could reverse. Here are some more examples: English: We dont have any time to waste. Espaol: No tenemos tiempo que perder. English: There is plenty of food to share. Espaol: Hay mucha comida para compartir. English: I know a lot of places to explore. Espaol: Conozco muchos lugares para explorar. English: I have a lot of work to do. Espaol: Tengo mucho trabajo que hacer. English: Their instructions highlight the need to put things in order before moving on. Espaol: Sus instrucciones destacan la necesidad de poner en orden las cosas antes de seguir adelante. Before moving on, I need to highlight that the above applies to infinitive verbs after nouns. In contrast, conjugated verbs after nouns are more obvious because they look more like English. In these sentences, we need to use que. For example: English is not a contrast, conjugated verbs after nouns are more obvious because they look more like English. In these sentences, we need to use que. For example: English is not a contrast, conjugated verbs after nouns are more obvious because they look more like English. In these sentences, we need to use que. For example: English is not a contrast, conjugated verbs after nouns. In contrast, conjugated verbs after nouns are more obvious because they look more like English. There is a project that we need to finish before tonight. Espaol: Hay un proyecto que necesitamos terminar antes de esta noche. Bonus tip: how to connect question words and verbsSlightly off the topic of prepositions, but very closely related in terms of sentence structure is the idea of connecting question words to infinitive verbs. These are more obvious and translate better than the sentences in the previous section. Here are some examples: English: I dont know what to do. Espaol: No s qu comer, hay muchas opciones. English: We arent sure what to say. Espaol: No estamos seguros de qu decir. Note that for the phrase estar seguro de, we need a de after the adjective seguro. Also, prepositions and adjectives are a topic for another post. But, the problem with this section is when you change the verb after the question word from an infinitive verb to a conjugated verb. For example: I don't know what to say. vs I dont know what you are saying. Then in the second case instead of a qu we should go for lo que. E.g. English: I dont know what you are saying. Espaol: No s lo que dices. If you would like to read more about lo que, you can check out the article on the uses of lo. Your turn Spanish prepositions and nouns arent like English, thats why are saying. Espaol: No s lo que dices. If you would like to read more about lo que, you can check out the article on the uses of lo. Your turn Spanish prepositions and nouns arent like English. they need a little practice to get right.
