The CDC has announced new regulations regarding travel with pets abroad, effective August 1, 2024. The updated rules include a detailed list available on the CDC website. Additionally, the PetLink Team provides guidance for pet owners: Schedule a vet appointment to determine your pet's health and obtain necessary documentation. Requirements may include microchips, vaccinations, permits, blood tests, and health certifications. To make your pet's journey smoother, consult your veterinarian about using calming aids and research your preferred airline's policies on pet travel. Different airlines have varying rules regarding pet transportation, so it's crucial to check these before booking a flight. Some U.S.-based carriers prohibit pets from flying during peak summer months due to heat risks. To ensure your pet's comfort, prepare them in advance by using an effective carrier and acclimating them to their new travel companion. Choose flights with minimal layovers and follow specific pre-flight routines for dogs and cats. If possible, check-in late to minimize airport stress or opt for a cargo hold to reduce your pet's exposure. Areas in Norway where pets are at high risk of contracting rabies.
